Rejection/Basis for Rejection

Applicant's Action

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| 1. "The terms 'cord' and 'cord means' which occur in each independent claim, are inconsistent and render the claims vague and indefinite."             | In claims such as 1-6, 10, 11 and 15, the use of terms such as "cord" and "cord means" is revised to ensure consistency.                         |
| 2. "Additionally, a shaft is recited, such as in claim 1, followed by recitation of first and second shafts. This also renders the claims indefinite." | In claim 1, terms which include "shaft" or "shafts" are clarified.   |
| 3. "In claim 2, steps (a) and (b) have no antecedent basis."   | In claim 2, antecedent basis is provided for steps (a) and (b).  |
| 4. "In claim 11, 'transmission mechanism' and 'transmission means' are inconsistent."  | Throughout the claims, including claims 6, 7, 9, 11, 12 and 14, "transmission mechanism" and "transmission means" are changed to "transmission." |

Reconsideration and withdrawal of the rejections under 35 U.S.C. § 112 are requested.

4. Withdrawal of Rejections of Claims 1-4 under 35 U.S.C. § 102

Claims 1-4 have been rejected under 35 U.S.C. §102(b) as being clearly anticipated by Gershuny US patent no. 2,687,769.

Claims 1 and 2 are method claims, the steps recited in which include pulling a pull cord in first and second directions and thereby converting rotation of a first shaft in a given direction into rotation of a second shaft in first and second directions.

Claims 3 and 4 specify reversible pull cord mechanisms comprising first and second shafts and various means for converting rotation of the first shaft in a given direction into rotation of the second shaft in first and second directions in response to pulling a pull cord in first and second directions.

Gershuny '769, with one exception, discloses embodiments of a venetian blind mechanism in which two pull cords rotate a single shaft in opposite directions. The exception, disclosed in Figure 8, uses two shafts and two pull cords: pulling the different pull cords rotates the first shaft in different directions, which in turn rotates the second shaft in different directions. In all embodiments disclosed in Gershuny '769, the venetian blind mechanism requires two pull cords, each of which inherently can rotate a cylinder in only a single direction regardless of the pull direction of that cord.

In short, Gershuny '769 does not disclose or suggest the different combinations of steps in Applicant's claims 1 and 2, or the different combinations of components in Applicant's claims 3 and 4, for converting rotation of a first shaft in a given direction into rotation of a second shaft in first and second directions based upon, that is, controlled by, pulling a cord in first and second directions.

It is submitted claims 1-4 patentably distinguish over Gershuny '769.

Reconsideration of the rejections of claims 1-4 based upon Gershuny '769 is requested, as is withdrawal of the rejections.
